INTRODUCTION.

FOR the transcript of the two Rolls now printed the Worcestershire Historical Society is indebted to Mr. Everard Barton, one of its members, who has not only continued his kindness of last year, when he presented the Society with a transcript of a Subsidy Roll, but has also placed in the hands of the Hon. Editor two further transcripts of succeeding Rolls, which it is hoped to publish in due course.

The Rolls now printed are not of the same kind as those already published by the Society. Those, with exception of the Nonarum Inquisitiones, gave the names of the individual payers of the tenth or fifteenth, as the case might be, in the several vills throughout the county. Of these, the first gives the names of the possessors of Knight's Fees within the county upon which the tax was levied; and the second, a list of amerciaments due to the Crown, which were ordered to be received by the collectors of the last imposed tax. Some portion of the first Roll is illegible, or nearly so, and these parts have been supplied by collation with a transcript of it in the Book of Aids, which was compiled in the time of Henry IV., some 70 or 80 years later than its date.

THE ROLL OF 1346.

The origin of the Knight's Fee is a little doubtful. In the Domesday Survey the land is marked out into hides, and Henry I., when he raised an aid for the marriage of his daughter, took 3s. for each hide. But when Henry II. raised a similar aid he took a mark, 13s. 4d., for each Knight's Fee. Nor was there any rule as to their extent. As was probably the case with the hide, it was determined by value rather than acreage, and the usual amount was no doubt the twenty pounds' worth of annual value, which, till the reign of Edward I., was the qualification of Knight-hood.

To raise an aid of this character, for the purpose of marrying his daughter and knighting his eldest son, was an ancient prerogative of the King, and he had no necessity to go to Parliament for its sanction, as was necessary to raise other taxation. But in voting a subsidy in 1340, the Parliament, by the 2nd Statute, ordered not only that the then subsidy should not be made a precedent for future imports, but that no charge or aid whatever should henceforth be levied without the assent of all estates of men in parliament assembled; by which it would appear that the King assented to abolish all unauthorised tallages. Yet in 1346 the King levied the present aid, thereby acting in an illegal manner; and by so doing he incurred a strong remonstrance from Parliament. The heading to the Roll, however, says that the aid was "granted" to the King. Possibly the collectors were not intimately acquainted with the constitutional law of the realm.

The Roll of 1346 mentions an aid granted to Edward I. on marrying his eldest daughter in 1289. The occasion of this was the marriage of his daughter Johanna to Gilbert, Earl of Clare. The marriage had been proposed in 1283, was sanctioned by the Pope in 1289, and took place in April, 1290. Even then, however, the parliament had a word in the matter, and registered their formal assent. The Commons were not represented in this parliament, but as the impost fell on tenants-in-chief only, the commons were probably held not to be concerned, and the future taxpayers to be represented by the barons. At this time the King had been out of the country for three years, and at first the barons declared they would grant nothing till they had seen the face of the king in his own land. The roll of this taxation though it must have been in the hands of the collectors of the present aid, is not now in existence for Worcestershire.

The occasion of the aid of 1346 was the knighting of Edward the Black Prince, and the need for it arose through the necessity of finding money to prosecute the war with France, declared on May 26, 1345. As well as being levied contrary to the statute of 1340, it was raised at double the amount fixed by the Statute of Westminster, at 40s. from each knight's fee instead of 20s.

A Roll, such as the one under consideration, is useful from an historical point of view as shewing the tenants-in-chief throughout the county at the several dates; and also the descent of estates and changes of ownership, and the successive heads of the chief county families. The Roll contains no returns for the Hundred of Blackenhurst. It would seem that the fees are totalled to correspond with the amount of the tax as set out in the Roll. In the totals for the Hundred of Halfshire on page 8, the number of fees is  $14\frac{1}{3}\frac{6}{8}\frac{7}{2}$ , while the tax at 40s. for each fee represents  $14\frac{1}{2}\frac{4}{8}\frac{7}{8}$  fees. In the words of the total, £29 at the rate of 40s. on each fee is the return for  $14\frac{1}{2}$  fees, 1s. that from a fortieth part of a fee, while a fortieth part of a fee is supposed to contain twelve parts, each returning 1*d.* In the totals for Doddingtree on page 13, the half fee must have been inserted by some error. Roger Washborne's holding in Stanford Washborne and Washborne, entered as "two parts" of a knight's fee, from the amount of the tax was two-thirds of a fee, and this being so, the number of fees adds up to  $20\frac{1}{3}$ , correctly represented by £20 6s. 8*d.* The totals of the Hundred of Pershore are correct, though the number of fees represented by the tax is arrived at by a round-about way;  $\frac{1}{3} + \frac{8}{80} = \frac{7}{20}$ , correctly represented by 14s. The total of the whole Roll on page 29 disregards the 1*d.*, which arose from the payment made by the Prior of Worcester and Roger Butterley for the 13th part of a Knight's Fee in Shelve, entered on page 6, which is  $\frac{1}{13}$ d. more than he should have paid.

THE ROLL OF 1358.

The second Roll here printed deals with a large class of amerancements, some of which have their origin in Anglo-Saxon and some in feudal customs. During the twelve years that had passed since the former taxation was made England had suffered from the first visitation of the plague, which occurred in 1349. In the meantime also several subsidies had been granted, the Rolls of which for Worcestershire are not in existence. In 1355 a subsidy was granted for six years on the understanding that no other tax should be imposed during that period. Nevertheless, in spite of this proviso, a fifteenth and a tenth were again granted in 1357, and it is the collectors of this subsidy no doubt who are mentioned at the beginning of the Roll. Most probably a special statute was passed giving the king for his own use the moveable goods of Felons, and he would therefore issue a writ to the Justices who condemned the felons, or some of them as representatives of the rest, to hand over such goods to the collectors named. That this was not a frequent method of raising money may perhaps be gathered from the fact that the entries run over twelve years, the date of the earliest circumstance that gives rise to one being 1346, the date of the previous Roll. No doubt the exigencies of the French war caused the King to look in every direction for the supplies with which to prosecute it.

The Roll affords us the names of some of the persons who were in official positions in the county at the time. What was the position of Thomas Cassy does not appear, though he was somehow concerned with the safe keeping of prisoners, as is evident from the entries and also from the last item on the Roll. He was one of the collectors of the aid of 1346, and sums which he had to pay form the bulk of the amount raised according to the present Roll. Out of a total of £87 9s. 10d. no less than £30 10s. was paid by him; and as the greater part of this arose from the escapes of prisoners, it was probably money in the nature of a fine which he would have to find out of his own purse. If he was the Sheriff for the year this would go to prove that the office was not without its attendant disadvantages. Only two of the eight entries in which his name is mentioned afford a date, and that the earliest found in the Roll, 1346. Other officials whose names are given, those of Thomas Somery and Richard Bromwich, bailiffs of the Hundred of Oswaldeslow in 1348 and 1354; John Spelby, Philip Bartlot and Simon Groos, bailiffs of Worcester in 1352 and 1357; and John Graas, bailiff of Wich in 1346. The names of three coroners are given: Richard Lench, in 1348 and 1353; Emund Dunclett, in 1355, and Thomas Littleton, in 1356 and 1357.
